A Walk Through Historic Gujo Hachiman

This walk begins at the Gujo Hachiman Tourism Association Office (Kinenkan) and takes you past some significant temples in the northern historic area of the town, and then across the beautiful Yoshida River to the southern area of the historic centre to visit museums, art galleries and temples. An optional visit to Gujo Hachiman Castle is also part of this walk.

Allow about 2 hours - longer if you plan to visit Gujo Hachiman Castle or visit some of the other attractions along the described route

Leaving the Gujo Hachiman Tourism Association Office (Kinenkan) and head toward Shin Bashi bridge. Cross over the bridge, which spans the Yoshida River, and walk towards the T-intersection in the road.

Standing at the T-intersection, on the right, you can see “Kahi” a poem about a fire that destroyed the northern section of the town in 1919. The location marks where the fire stopped and poem is carved into rock and bathed in water as a reminder of the terrible event.

Also at the T-intersection, on the left, is a small cave shrine (Shinno Yakshi) dating from 1781. This shrine is for good health and long life and is the home of a small festival on the 3rd Saturday in July each year.

From the cave shrine head left (west) up a gentle northwest curving slope past some small shops for about 30 metres. At the first intersection (on the right) there is a sign for Gujo Hachiman Castle. Follow the sign and turn right (north) into Yanagi Machi or Willow Street. As you walk north along Yanagi Machi you will pass a typical historic house and garden on the right hand side (this is a private home).

Continue along Yanagi Machi, until you see Jokamachi Plaza on your left. This wide open space is also the downtown bus terminal.

Optional Visit to Gujo Hachiman Castle - Allow approximately 1½ hours to visit the castle. (If you prefer to skip the visit to the castle continue the walking tour at below.)

With Jokamachi Plaza on your left, turn right at the first intersection and head up the hill. As you climb the hill you will have a nice view of Anyo Ji temple. Interesting Fact! Anyo Ji was completely rebuilt after the fire of 1919, Anyo Ji and is the largest wooden structure in Gifu Prefecture.

At about the middle of the hill, Anyo Ji Temple is on your left, and on your right is Zenko Ji temple. Ahead of you, the stairs in the curve of the road go up to Kishitsurugi Shrine and Gochikuin Temple. The bell at Gochikuin Temple is rung daily at 6:00 am, noon, 6:00 p.m. and 9:00 p.m. and of course to welcome the new year.

From this vantage point, you have an excellent view of both the western part of town and Anyo Ji Temple. You can also see Tosen Ji Temple on the opposite hill. Traveler Tip! This is an excellent photography vantage point.

Continue along the road to the top of the hill. At the top of the hill is a parking lot. The area around the parking lot is popular in the spring for groups and families to come and see the cherry blossoms (hanami). There is also an interesting statue of a man, a woman and a horse. The man is Yama no Uchi Kazutoya - the lord of Tosa from 1601 to 1605, and the woman is his wife Chiyo who was born in Gujo Hachiman. Chiyo is famous for secretly saving money and then making a timely gift of a horse to her husband - famously symbolizing teamwork and cooperation between spouses.

At the V-intersection in the road, keep right, and passing behind the statue, continue up the hill to Gujo Hachiman Castle. From the castle you can enjoy a beautiful view of the town, and the surrounding valley. Traveler Tip! For a better view of the town and surrounding valley visit the castle and climb the stairs to the top floor!

Retrace your steps back down the hill to the intersection just below Anyo Ji Temple and just above Jokamachi Plaza.

Continue north along Yanagi Machi. Beside the street, and beneath a large cherry tree you will notice a small waterway along the wall below the temple grounds. Traveler Tip! It’s safe to drink from any of the fountains that you will pass as you walk along this historic street.

As you walk along Yanagi Machi (heading north), look for the red fire buckets hanging from the low eaves, and for the metal bells or “hansho.” The hansho are rung to alert others in the street to a fire, and there is a strict code of how and when the bell is rung. Please do not try to ring the bell!

On either side of the street are narrow water channels typical of many streets in the town. Originally built to help fight fires, these water channels are used in daily life to rinse vegetables, and wash small household articles.

Continue towards the end of the street, for about 300 metres. At about 20 metres before the end of the street at point, turn left (east) down a narrow street toward the Hakurankan or Gujo Hachiman City Museum.
At the first intersection you will find Gujo Hachiman City Museum (Hakurankan) on the left hand side and a small modern temple built of concrete (Join Ji) on the right hand side. The City Museum features a good gift shop and offers daily Gujo Odori lessons (4 times daily at 11:00, 13:00, 14:00 and 15:00) included in the admission fee. The explanation of how to dance is in Japanese only but it’s easy to follow along. Traveler Tip: Plan your walk to allow the opportunity to take in a Gujo Odori lesson or plan to return later.

Continue the tour by crossing the street and proceeding to the L-shaped turn. At the L-shaped turn in the street behind the large wooden gate, is Chokyo Ji Temple. You might also like to venture over the bridge to Daijo Ji which also has a very peaceful and quiet garden and is often visited by locals looking for a quite place to meditate and contemplate life. Interesting fact! Daijo Ji was the only temple in the northern district to survive the fire of 1919.

Continuing from the gate of Chokyo Ji temple, (heading south) continue straight down Shokunin Machi, which literally means “craftsmen’s street.” Notice that the fire buckets are a different colour - each street is different!

About half the way down the street (heading south) on the left hand side is Ren Sho Ji temple. Walking south along Shokunin Machi you can see many old-style traditional shops and businesses including a traditional cinnamon candy store and several kimono stores.

Continue walking south along Shokunin Machi until you almost reach the end. As you walk south, the street name changes from Shokunin Machi to Kajia Machi and then to Hon Machi. About 20 metres before the end of the street, on your right, from Hon Machi is a small street paved with smooth stones. There is a gate with hanging lanterns at the entrance to the street. Proceed down that small narrow street toward the Kodara River. Just before a red bridge is Sogi Sui shrine.

Sogi Sui water spring is the site where fifteenth century poet Sogi and local feudal lord To Tsuneyori exchanged farewell poems when the poet returned to Kyoto after visiting Gujo Hachiman. Interesting Fact! The water spring and small shrine are recognized by the Japanese Ministry of Environment for both ecological and historical significance. Retrace your steps back to Hon Machi and continue your tour walking towards the end of Hon Machi which ends in a small square surrounded by various shops and restaurants - and notably a local sake brewer.

Option! Walk up from the end of Hon Machi towards map point keeping a sharp eye out for a small shrine on your right hand side. The shrine is at the top of a large rock and can only be reached by climbing a narrow sharp set of stairs. Use extreme caution to climb and descend the stairs if you would like to visit the shrine.

Continue your tour walking towards Miyagase Bridge and cross over the bridge. Traveler Tip! Early morning photography from Miyagase Bridge will often reward you with pictures of the morning mist in the mountains above the river!
Shortly after crossing over the bridge and walking south is the Sample Kobo food replica shop. This is just one of many workshops that produce the ubiquitous plastic food replicas that you see in the windows of restaurants across Japan. Traveler Tip! Allow time to stop at the Sample Kobo and take a short lesson in making your own food sample! (allow about 1 to 1½ hours)

At the corner head east towards the Omodakaya Folk Craft Museum and Yanaka Komichi. Close to Yanaka Komichi you will also find the Saito Tea Ceremony Museum, and the Yudokan Paper Craft Art Gallery. Each of these is worth a visit.

Continue your walking tour by retracing your steps back to the Sample Kobo Food Replica store and workshop intersection. This intersection is also home to the Koike Taxi stand — you will see a big “Taxi!” sign. At the intersection turn right and head south along Hashimoto cho street to the end beside Ganren Ji temple. In the Edo period, Hashimoto cho was known as a wealthy merchant street. Many large merchant houses and stores remain today.

At Ganren Ji turn left and head west, over a small stream, to intersection indicated on the map. As you head towards point you will pass Watanabe Indigo Dyer on your left. Traveler Tip! Indigo dyed goods produced by Watanabe are available for sale both at his studio and at the Gujo Hachiman Tourism Association Office (Kinenkan) Gift Shop. Prices in both locations are identical but selection may vary. Many designs are sold out later in the year.

At intersection turn right and head south towards Jion Ji Zen Temple. Home to a stunning garden tucked in behind the temple, the garden is definitely worth a visit - especially in the autumn! Traveler Tip! Allow time to sit and meditate in the beautiful Japanese garden. Listen carefully for the sound of the “sui kin kutsu” or water harp located underground near the exit from the garden viewing platform. (Listen near the door for a clear sharp “ping” sound!) Note: Photography is not permitted in Jion Ji temple.

Leaving Jion Ji Zen temple head east towards point which is an intersection beside the small stream. Turn right and walk north beside the small stream towards point. In the spring this street is lined with cherry trees and the blossoms are breathtaking. Continue to the large intersection at Sakyo Machi street. From here you can see the meiji style Gujo Hachiman Tourist Association office Kinenkan building where you began this walking tour.

Continue along Sakyo Machi past the Gujo Hachiman Tourism Association Office & Gift Shop building, and past the parking lot to point - the entrance to a small and unique street Igawa Komichi. This narrow street, flanked by a fast running and deep canal, is only 1 meter wide and impassable except on foot. Traveler Tip! You can buy a bag of fish food pellets for ¥100 from a wooden self-service station at the entrance to the street to feed the large and tame koi fish.

Walking along this small street you will see some excellent examples of unique “washing platforms” built over the canal and still used today to wash vegetables and household items in the canal. Continue along Igawa komichi until the end. From here you can retrace your steps back to the Gujo Hachiman Tourism Association Office (Kinenkan) and Gift Shop or continue exploring the rest of the town on your own!
